

Найти помощь
Пожертвовать

Привлечение негосударственных вооруженных формирований для защиты пропавших без вести

Защита пропавших без вести: как негосударственные вооруженные формирования могут изменить ситуацию

Обязательства и практика негосударственных вооруженных группировок по защите разлученных с семьями, пропавших без вести и погибших — новый доклад МККК

В результате современных вооруженных конфликтов сотни тысяч семей оказались разлучены. Близкие пропали без вести. Родители не знают, где их дети, а жены, мужья и дети ждут новостей, которые могут так и не прийти.

Прочитайте полный отчет

Только в 2025 году Международный комитет Красного Креста (МККК) зарегистрировал более 178 300 новых случаев пропажи людей по всему миру — это самый высокий показатель за последние два десятилетия. За каждой цифрой стоит семья, живущая в неопределённости, не способная скорбеть, не способная жить дальше и зачастую не имеющая доступа к базовым правам без подтверждения того, что случилось с теми, кого они любят.

Не знать о судьбе и местонахождении близкого человека, также известное как амбивалентная утрата, — боль от неизвестности, жив он или мертв, — одна из самых глубоких и невидимых ран, которые наносит вооруженный конфликт.

Установление судьбы и местонахождения пропавших без вести людей является как гуманитарной необходимостью, так и юридическим обязательством в соответствии с международным гуманитарным правом (МГП). Все стороны вооруженного конфликта — как государства, так и негосударственные субъекты — должны предпринимать конкретные шаги для предотвращения случаев исчезновения людей, поиска пропавших без вести и информирования их семей.

Несмотря на то, что юридические обязательства ясны, негосударственные вооруженные формирования зачастую о них не знают, не дают своим членам указаний принимать практические меры для предотвращения разлучения семей и случаев исчезновения людей, а также сталкиваются с трудностями при поиске пропавших без вести и опознании погибших.

Практическое исследование, основанное на опыте

The ICRC's new study, Non-State Armed Groups and the Separated, Missing and Dead: Obligations Under International Humanitarian Law and Examples of How to Implement Them, brings together law and practice with concrete considerations about how non-state armed groups (NSAGs) can protect family life, prevent people from going missing, protect those who go missing, and treat the deceased with dignity – no matter which side of the conflict they were on.

The report restates the IHL framework applicable in non-international armed conflicts and presents concrete examples of how non-State armed groups have implemented their obligations. It draws on the ICRC's operational experience and reflects the observed practice, reported practice and doctrine of 64 NSAGs that are currently parties to non-international armed conflicts or have been so since the 1960s.

The report shows what respect for the law looks like in practice and the impact simple, achievable steps can make on families who are separated by war, searching for a missing loved one.

Read the full report

The report comes with a pocket card designed to be carried by non-state armed groups, setting out a selection of IHL rules that every member of a non-State armed group should know and follow.

Download the pocket card

What the law says: Eleven rules for NSAGs

International humanitarian law sets out clear obligations for non-State armed groups regarding people separated because of the conflict, the missing and deceased. The pocketcards present these obligations in eleven rules, and the study adds practical examples of ways to implement them.

1. If possible, warn civilians of fighting and allow families to flee together.
2. Allow people under your control to search for and contact family members.
3. Provide families who ask about their missing loved ones with any information you have.
4. Record who is involved in the fighting, including details such as their name and height, plus any scars or tattoos. If possible, give each fighter at least one identification item, such as an ID disc (or "dog tag"), an ID card, or their name and/or number on their uniform. After each operation, record who was killed or captured or went missing.
5. Make a list of all detainees with their full name and date of birth, plus rank and service number for soldiers, as well as when and where they were captured and who is responsible for their detention. Inform the ICRC about any detainees you hold.
6. Allow detainees to contact their families and help them do so.
7. After each operation, and whenever possible, search for, collect and evacuate all the dead, no matter who they are (friend or enemy).

8. Protect the dead from being mutilated. Do not remove or steal their personal belongings.
9. Return the dead and their belongings to their families, for instance with the help of the ICRC or by allowing authorities to recover remains in territory under your control.
10. If you cannot evacuate the dead, bury them respectfully, with one body per grave or with bodies separated in common graves. Record all available identification information prior to burial and mark the location of the grave. Keep records of all burial sites.
11. Search for missing persons and share any information you have about missing enemy soldiers or civilians with the enemy and with the ICRC.

ICRC recommendations

Based on the study's findings, the ICRC makes two key recommendations:

1. Put systems in place to record and share information

Parties to non-international armed conflicts should:

- establish a single process to record information on detainees and the dead
- designate a clear point of contact for families searching for relatives
- use neutral intermediaries, such as the ICRC, when needed to collect and transmit information and inform families of the fate and whereabouts of their loved ones

2. Address the missing and dead in peace processes

The search for missing people and the recovery and identification of the dead should be included in truce, ceasefire and peace negotiations and agreements.

Supporting concrete action

It is hoped that this study and 'pocket card' may provide evidence-based examples of how NSAGs can protect family unity, prevent people from going missing, and help finding people reported missing. It may also be of interest for states that consider supporting non-state parties to armed conflicts, humanitarian organizations working for the protection of missing and dead people, and researchers working on related issues.

Read more about the practical steps non-state armed groups can take and the recommendations in the full report.

Download

Useful links

Full Report: Non-state armed groups and the separated, missing and dead: Obligations under international humanitarian law and examples of how to implement them

EVENT: Protecting Missing Persons in Armed Conflict: Engaging Non-State Armed Groups

Pocket card on the protection of the separated, missing and dead

Humanitarian law and policy blog: Engaging non-state armed groups on the protection of missing people and their families

Daily life in contested territories: How civilians navigate violence, risk and uncertainty

International humanitarian law on: Dialogue with weapon bearers

Related

Article

17-04-2026

Jordan: Facts and Figures - January to December 2025

Article

15-04-2026

Lebanon: Maintaining
water and essential
lifelines as hostilities disrupt essential services

Statement

15-04-2026

ICRC president: Patterns of warfare that disregard human life and dignity cannot continue as Sudan war
enters fourth year