Just found out J1 and J2 are merging. I am cooked

Been OE for about 14 months. J1 is a mid-size SaaS company, J2 is a smaller competitor in the same vertical. Both fully remote, different tech stacks, zero client overlap as far as I knew. Picked J2 specifically because they were small enough that I figured there'd never be any crossover with J1.

Got an email from J1's CEO this morning with the subject line "exciting news" which is already never good. They're acquiring J2. My J2. The company I've been simultaneously working at for over a year.

I have calls with people at both companies. Some of them are about to be coworkers. My name is in both slack directories. I use a slightly different name format at J2 (first initial + last name instead of full name) but come on thats not gonna hold up once they start merging systems.

I don't know what the timeline is. Integration could take months or it could start next week. No idea when someone pulls up both employee lists and goes wait why is this guy in here twice.

Right now I'm trying to figure out if I should just quit J2 before anyone notices or ride it out and pray the merge takes forever. Part of me wants to wait and see if J2 does layoffs during restructuring so I can at least get severance but that feels like playing with fire.

Anyway I'm stress eating goldfish at my desk at 10am. Open to suggestions

When your coworkers who saw you quit see you show up the next day on the conference call as one of the most senior employees you gotta run it to the bitter end. Pitch yourself as the only engineer capable of merging both systems and then negotiate an exit
