Согласно ежеквартальному отчету компании, AMD напрямую арендовала 377 МВт на объектах Core Scientific в Пекосе и округе Хант, штат Техас, а также в Маскоги, штат Оклахома.

Неназванный облачный провайдер арендовал еще 152 МВт в Оберне, штат Алабама, и Далтоне, штат Джорджия, по соглашениям, заключенным при поддержке AMD.

Core Scientific и AMD будут сотрудничать в области проектирования центров обработки данных и внедрения графических процессоров AMD Instinct, процессоров ЕРУС и программного обеспечения ROCm, сообщили компании.

AMD также получила право на покупку до 30 миллионов акций Core Scientific по цене 23,47 доллара за акцию. Около 6,5 млн акций перешли в собственность компании после подписания первоначальных договоров аренды, а дополнительные warrants перейдут в собственность по мере заключения контрактов на дополнительные мощности.

The partnership accelerates Core Scientific's move away from bitcoin mining. Colocation generated $136.7 million, or 83% of its $164.2 million in second-quarter revenue, while self-mining revenue fell 66% to $21.5 million.

Core Scientific also terminated an agreement to buy Block's (XYZ) bitcoin-mining chips and recorded a $41.9 million charge as a result. The 2024 agreement covered 3-nanometer chips representing roughly 15 EH/s of hashrate.

The data center operator held 848 BTC worth $49.7 million on June 30, up from 547 BTC three months earlier. It sold 2,385 BTC for $208.2 million in the first quarter of the year.

CORZ shares are up 5.6% in pre-market trading. AMD is lower by 4% as chip stocks continue to sell off.
