

ARTIFICIAL INTELLIGENCE

Google is rationing Gemini access to Meta because it cannot provide enough compute

Meta had been using Gemini for content moderation and safety processes. It is now shifting workloads to its own Muse Spark model to reduce external dependence.

June 28, 2026 - 12:09 pm

TL;DR

Google capped Meta's Gemini access due to compute constraints. Meta told staff to use AI tokens more efficiently and is shifting to its own

Skip to content

The latest rumblings from the EU tech scene, a story from our wise ol' founder Boris, and some questionable AI art. It's free, every week, in your inbox. Sign up now!

With expertise in digital marketing, product management, and branding & identity, Ana Maria Constantin develops strategies that resonate (show all)

Skip to content

Popular articles

- 1 India's payments chief says AI will drive UPI from 750 million to a billion daily transactions
- 2 Salesforce employees are confused about why the company is promoting a competitor inside Slack
- 3 The 33-year-old ex-Snap exec Nadella is trusting to fix Copilot now oversees 11,000 people
- 4 Cloudflare cut 1,100 jobs and then grew its engineering team by 45 percent, and its CEO says the pattern will repeat everywhere
- 5 Silicon Valley backed Trump to kill AI regulation, now the industry is begging for rules

Related Articles

ARTIFICIAL INTELLIGENCE

FTC clears Musk to acquire SpaceX alumni startup Mesh, the optical hardware company his data centers need

ARTIFICIAL INTELLIGENCE

OpenAI poache

The heart of tech

More TNW

Media

Events

Spaces

Newsletters

About TNW

Partner with us

Terms & Conditions

Cookie Statement

Privacy Statement

A Tekpon Company

Copyright © 2006—2026, Cogneve, INC. Made with <3 in Amsterdam.